THE SOUTH AND THE OFFER OF CONGRESS.

The rejection which the unconditional offer of Congress has met with from the press of the Southern States thus far, is precisely what we predicted—wholesale denunciation and silenced scorn. The Richmond Examiner hints, shrewdly, Southern States as certain against "this progeny of sorrow and sin," declares that it has "direct and positive information that the President will oppose it, and will urge the people of the South to reject it." We have no doubt of the South—his veto proposition will be received with contempt, and the President will oppose it, because he means the equal of the white man, though they will give him equal protection when they get of being represented; and the only thing that will induce them to accept the offer of Congress is the conviction that they cannot help themselves. Such language as that of the Petersburg (Va.) Index commenting in similar style on the entire proposition is the key to the whole important section embodying States from representation in proportion as they shall exclude their citizens from voting; it says that "the Democratic party will never consent to make the negro equal; but, in on the contrary, it will insist that the States shall be represented in proportion to their voting population, and that the negro shall not be counted in the basis of representation." Such is the temper of the people of the South, and this report can be regarded as full and correct.

The Baltimore Sun says:

"The new terms of restoration are strange in many respects, and will be received with surprise by the people by whose representatives they were framed. Nothing is said about the right of suffrage, which is left entirely to the States, and the only condition imposed is that the elective franchise shall be granted to the negroes now and hereafter resident in the States. Nothing is said about the payment of the public debt, or any other debt, or the repudiation of the debts contracted in the name of the Confederate States. Nothing is said about the ordinances of secession, or the validity of the acts of the Confederate States. Nothing is said about the payment of the debts contracted by the States in the name

"God's Country!"—Speeches.

"God's Country!" As they used those words to me on board, and pointed to the green fields and the trees, and the cattle, and the sheep, and the cows, and the horses, and the houses, and the churches, and the villages, and the towns, and the cities, and the people, and the wealth, and the prosperity, and the happiness, and the contentment, and the comfort, and the luxury, and the plenty, and the freedom, and the liberty, and the equality, and the fraternity, and the sisterhood, and the brotherhood, and the motherhood, and the fatherhood, and the childhood, and the manhood, and the womanhood, and the everything else that is good, and pure, and holy, and righteous, and noble, and lofty, and grand, and beautiful, and magnificent, and sublime, and heavenly, and divine, and God-like, that there is in this world, and in the universe, and upon the inner surface of it, that was ever created, or ever will be created, and I said, "Yes, this is God's country," and I felt that I was a better man for having been born in it, and for having lived in it, and for having worked in it, and for having fought for it, and for having suffered in it, and for having died in it, and for having been buried in it, and for having been born again
